Moss Landing, south pipe

Tom North was scuba diving with Sam Teel at the Marina pipeline looking for halibut. The visibility was a murky 3-5 feet and Tom was scanning the sand for hallies. He scanned right, then left and that's when he saw a great white's tail. So the shark must have seen him first and made a pass. Tom says he wasn't on the shark's menu that day. He also decided that lingcod wasn't on his menu so he dumped the one from his stringer and went back to the boat. Sam was on the surface and didn't see the fish.
